A group in Crawford County is looking to provide healthier food options for Arma residents.

Live Well Crawford County has plans to bring a community garden to the area by summertime.

The project is a way for lower income Arma residents to have access to nutritious food.

With the town not having its own grocery store, community leaders say the garden will serve the neighborhood as a local source of healthy food.

“Arma has never had a community garden, so it’s a real resident-lead, grassroots work to where a group of people want to grow food, and distribute it for free to those who need it. To where the most healthy food you could possibly get is in your town,” says Matt O’Malley, Live Well Crawford County.

The organization is hoping to have the garden up and running by July 4th, 2019.

Later this month, they will be launching a website to help raise the rest of the funds needed to start the garden.

They already have $6,000 while looking to reach their goal of $9,000.
