To help combat the food insecurity issues in the Crawford County town, live well crawford county is calling on anyone in the area to donate to the cause.

They are in need of three thousand dollars to reach their goal of nine thousand dollars in total.

The city has promised to help cover the water bills to keep the garden healthy.

So they are hoping the community buys into bringing good food to those who need it.

Matt O'Malley with Live Well Crawford County says, "People of all ages and all income levels, their health is affected by the fact that their 9 miles away from a tomato or a head of lettuce. So that's why you should give. Because this is going to improve the health of the community and especially those most vulnerable like low income households."

Live well crawford county is hoping to have the garden up and running by next month.
