Southeast Kansas residents are learning more about food issues within their state.

Kansas Appleseed, Live Well Crawford County, and the League of Women Voters of Kansas held a Food Policy Forum this evening. This meeting discussed topics like Kansas food sales tax, food security, and Kansas' Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program.

They also discussed how residents can get involved in the process of changing some of these food related issues within the state.

“there’s been a lot of great response down here in southeast kansas. People are really excited in kansas to see people doing projects like this, getting involved politically. A lot of folks, frankly, are not use to it. And they have been excited to jump right in and get involved.” says Southeast Kansas Appleseed Director Caleb Smith

Kansas appleseed is planning to host another public forum in columbus within the next few weeks.
